English Schoolgirls Being Overtaught; Not Enough Time Left for Play and Fun

LONDON, July 9 .- Are girls be-

The statement made by Miss Major in her presidential address at the Manchester Headmistresses' Conference has arounsed a storm of criticism.

"I do not think that schoolgiris at present are overworked," sald Lady Yoxall, wife of Sir James Yoxall, the ardent educationist, who is herself keenly interested in education. "The only tendency to danger that I can see lies in the case of brilliantly clever girls who are liable to overwork. The physical exercise and play that girls get should obviate all danger of overstrain."

A frank criticism came from a pupil at the Haberdashers' Aske's Girls' School, Acton, who is one of about 500 students, "There is no doubt," she said,

"that the present time curriculum which we are expected to get through when we are about to years does not leave us much time for play or fun."
